"The defining crisis of the 21st century wasn't even a real crisis, it was the phoney pandemic. From 2020 to 2024, everyone on earth, without exception, revealed who they really were: hero or coward, informed or imbecile. But the most despicable and insidious of all was the profiteer. e.g. "Influencers."
Makow comment- Since wars are a hoax, we could expand this criticism of profiteers far beyond the Covid hoax.

An archetype that reveals itself in times of crisis is the profiteer.

Profiteers don't just profit from crisis, they create crisis, along with the enemy they claim to be fighting.

The CIA funds and creates terrorists. The Southern Poverty Law Center funds and creates the racists they claim to oppose.

Profiteers create wars in which they supply arms and loans at heavy interest to both sides. They create pandemics in which they supply the fake medicines. In both cases, they profit from the destruction that they themselves create.

We saw this in both World War II and the phony pandemic. Profiteers created World War II (and World War I), made billions of dollars off the death, misery and destruction they caused, and then reaped even more profits by Profiteers created the phony pandemic, made billions of dollars off the death, misery, and destruction they caused, and are still profiting from it today, raking in enormous sums of money by “treating” the huge upsurge in cancer patients.

I would argue that COVID does kill some of the right people. The anti-vaxxers/maskers are dying in legions.

THE OPPORTUNISTS

Among the profiteers are opportunists. Opportunists are small time profiteers. They don’t create the crises themselves, but they have no hesitation in making a profit off any crisis that the profiteers create.

Opportunists act as paid propagandists, shilling whatever narrative their masters pay them to shill. At their core, opportunists are media whores, reveling in the attention they receive. They don’t even care what they’re shilling, as long as the spotlight is on them and as long as they’re being paid.

We saw countless examples of this during the phony pandemic. Thousands of media influencers took their thirty pieces of silver to shill the Stupid-19 virus and the fake vaccine. Many of them, despite their young age, are now dead or dying of cancer.

The percentage of these influencers who have died is similar to the number of witnesses to the JFK assassination who died within two years of the event. It’s a statistical improbability of such staggering proportions that some call it a mathematical impossibility. Yet there it is.

Some people call this karma. I call it cause and effect. You can’t inject yourself with an unsafe and untested chemical concoction and not expect bad things to happen. It’s just not possible.

One such media whore, who died last week from brain cancer at the young age of 48, is Jill Smokler, left, the founder of Scary Mommy. Smokler frequently used the term “anti-vaxxer” to belittle those who questioned the official narrative. She accused them of lying, and was responsible for duping thousands of brainwashed suburban soccer moms into injecting themselves and their children with poison.

How much was Smokler paid to do this? We’ll never know. Perhaps she did it for the attention and virtue signaling benefits. But what good is that money and media attention doing her now?

In the same way that the heroes of World War II – those who opposed the war – were ignored and forgotten. The heroes of the phony pandemic – those who dared to speak the truth and call it for what it was, a hoax – are also forgotten. No one remembers them. No one has the decency to say to them, “You know, you were right all along.”

The most intelligent person I spoke to during the entire phony pandemic was a skinny nineteen-year-old black girl with tattoos on her neck. She was one of the few people – and I mean very few people – in my entire neighborhood who refused to take the clot shot. She was one of the quiet, unassuming heroes who emerge during times of crisis. Sadly, there are always too few of them.
